I. INTRODUCTION

Education is the process of man making. The main aim of all education of all training should be man making, says-“R.Tagore” I believe that a teacher is someone who becomes through many years of training and experiences in the field. I have not found a teacher who is an expert the first day of their profession. I believe that is urgent for everyone who is a teacher or is planning to become one to get prepare in the field the best they can. All teachers who get prepare will know how to set up rules in the classroom. Those kinds of teachers will probably have fewer problems in their classroom because they will be able to control the classroom.

*“One looks back with appreciation to the brilliant teachers,
But with gratitude to those who touched our human feelings.
The curriculum is so much necessary raw material,
But warmth is the vital element for the growing plant and
For the soul of the child.” ~Carl Jung*

II. OBJECTIVE

1. To know the duties of a teacher
2. To teach the humanitarian values apart from the teaching related to text book

III. TEACHER AS A ROLE MODEL

Role Models are people who set good examples by the words they speak and by the actions they take’s Role Models can be the people you know personally or people you have learned about in the news at school or on television.

Students tend to copy the behavior and mannerism of the teachers. The teachers entire personality is a reflection on the minds of the students. If the teacher is honest, leads a balanced and disciplined life, the children adopt these virtues as a ideal conduct unconsciously. The ideal teacher’s one who through his thoughts, words and deeds, gives and an impression of an honest upright life which can serve as a model for the students to copy, follow and emulate.

“The task of the excellent teacher is to stimulate “apparently ordinary” people to unusual effort. The tough problem is not in identifying winners: it is in making winners out of ordinary people.” How true and significant this quote is! If we try to take an in-depth peek in some famous people’s life we can see that they were motivated encouraged and made to dream impossible by their teachers. After reading Dr. A.P.J Abdul Kalam’s autobiography, Wings of Fire, I was moved to see the influence of his teachers in his life from the early stages of his education. And today he is the dream man for India, who not only successfully ran his tenure but also gave vision to many and made them dream that nothing is impossible.

It is evident that a teacher plays very essential role, more than anyone does in a student’s life. A good teacher takes students with him to the regions, which are shut and he is the one who opens them and let them explore on their own and stays with them as a guide. He needs to have a command that stays with a student and fills them with a fear, which is due to respect and not out of stick which he carries. Making enough is more challenging. Only a good citizen can serve his family, society and his country.

A teacher’s purpose is not to create students in his own image, but to develop students who can create their own image.’ The role of the best teacher is to give wings to the imaginations, and sow the seeds of knowledge with patience in student’s fertile mind. The trick is to do it with love and affection and with the sense of real teaching and not just as a duty because he is getting paid for that.

A role model is, therefore, one who has some sterling qualities of head and heart, which the child gets impressed by. So now, when we look for the essential qualities in a teacher we have to be clear in what we want the children in her charge to become, for the influence of a teacher is very deep, far reaching and of course permanent. The teacher must then be very honest in all her behavior with the children she is handling. In this regard, partiality and favoritism are the two obnoxious qualities that a teacher should not have. This attitude of a teacher is noticed by the children and they do not like her for it, and they also feel that she is not very honest in her dealings with them. In the process they also learn to be dishonest in their dealings with her, and with their classmates. Thus, an ideal teacher must be very honest and transparent in all her dealings with the children and with her colleagues. This folly of favoritisms plays a double havoc with the children for, on the one hand, a child who is favored, becomes unnecessarily pampered and the child who is unduly differentiated against, either gets into his shell, and feels unwanted or, if he is bold by nature, he becomes a revolutionary. In either case this favoritism of the teacher plays hell with both, the favored and the not-so-favored. This attitude of the child, shown at this stage of his life becomes a permanent feature of the child’s character, and he starts feeling rightly or wrongly that he is punished for the wrongs that he has not done, and as an adult he becomes a confirmed revolutionary. This, in a nutshell we can derive that, in her partiality the teacher damages both the child who is favoured and the child who is not.

The next quality that we would like to find in an ideal teacher is that, he should be very affectionate to all the children in his care. The love they get at this stage of life is what makes them lovable and affectionate adults. Love has got to be inculcated in the children as, it is love only that makes life worth living. So is very necessary for an ideal teacher to be loving and caring, then only he in turn infuses the finer quality of begetting love in the children in his charge.

The students believe that their teacher is a fountain-head of all knowledge. This belief of the children must be kept alive by the teacher which is possible, only if he continues to learn together with his teaching assignments. A good teacher is the one who is also a good learner.

Besides, if a teacher does not happen to know a particular thing, he should never pose as if he knows it. This is because, if, at any stage, the children come to know that their teacher does not know, he only shows that he knows, they lose all respect for him. The teacher must know that, the children do not take much time to assess the stuff or the capacity of a teacher. It is not that the teacher must know everything on the face of this earth but, the moot point is that, he should not bluff the children into believing that his knowledge is absolutely complete. For an ideal teacher it is advisable to tell the children that he will find out the answer to their query, instead of giving them any wrong information. If he does this, the children will admire him for his honesty, and will not be disappointed in his lack of knowledge, for, they also, know that a teacher is also, besides being a teacher for them, a human being with limitations. This will unwittingly inculcate in the children a habit of accepting their own drawbacks and not nearly justifying whatever they do or say.

Another very important quality for an ideal teacher is to very understand in respect of the behavior of the children. Though the teacher and the children are a generation apart, it would be great quality in a teacher if he could understand the woes of the children, and to help them out of their seemingly little problems, and also feel for them. With this attitude of friendship with the children, the teacher will win the confidence and they will always discuss their problems, with him and they will also take him as their confidante. For this, the teacher has to put himself in the shoes of the children, understand their feelings, and he will be loved for this. In turn, his wards will also learn the art of helping their younger siblings or friends in solving their problems.

With all the above mentioned qualities in a teacher, the teacher will be an ideal teacher, he will be one who will leave an indelible mark on the minds of the young children in his charge. They will turn out to be exact replicas of their teacher. Thus, it is very important for the teacher to be a picture of what he would like the children to be. The impact of a teacher can be easily felt when we see the present deterioration in the younger generation. This is because our teachers are lacking in almost all the qualities required for an ideal teacher, and so, their wards are also lacking in all good qualities of head heart.

A good teacher helps the students to develop all the great qualities of civilized human beings. An ideal teacher is thus one who leaves a permanent impact on the children he grooms, and they remember him for his great qualities at different times of their lives. A student is a mirror which reflects the learning and knowledge of a teacher; this must be kept in mind by a teacher.

IV. PERSONALITY MATTERS A LOT

First, the teacher's personality should be pleasantly live and attractive. Students see their teacher as a role model. Students spend great part of their day in front of teachers. The each and every act of teacher is closely observed by the students. Teachers should be a role model even outside the campus.

V. ABILITY TO UNDERSTAND

They should have a capacity to understand the minds and feelings of children. It will help them creating a positive relation with students. Understanding is a great power.

VI. PATIENCE REQUIRED

On the other hand, a teacher must be capable of infinite patience. Teachers should accept a fact that children makes mistake normally. Teachers are also humans. They will also have limitations and negative. But teacher should try to be a better human.

A. A teacher is also a student

I think a teacher should have the kind of mind which always wants to go on learning. Teaching is a job at which one will never be perfect; there is always something more to learn about it. Teaching profession is one of the most respected jobs in the society. It's a great field which requires dedication. It shouldn't be just treated as a way of making money. They have lots of responsibilities.

VII. CONCLUSION

Lessons learned inside the classroom and through teacher-student interactions outside of the classroom should be based on virtues. Integrity, honesty, trust, fairness, respect and responsibility should characterize teachers in their relationships with students. Teachers with and among student, treat others respectfully by believing in the inherent dignity of every person, and execute their responsibilities in morally accountable ways society is best serve, when teachers teach and model and student develop, character and moral virtues. Students are tomorrow's future and teachers have a great role in their character formation. A teacher who understands this will be a model to the students and the society.
